

Tarua Hall

Tarua Hall reigns from southern California where she began dancing at age 4. She lived in Cuba as a young child where she trained and fell in love with the Meringue, Cha - Cha, and Salsa. She moved to Mississippi furthering her dance education and finally making it back to California where her true and intense training began.

Tarua has received elite training in all styles and techniques and is constantly looking for new ways to passionately share and create with aspiring dancers. She has studied in the Palomar College dance program and under masters such as Joe Tremaine, Doug Caldwell, Patty Obey, and the late Gus Giordano, as a convention student. Tarua is known for having a keen eye for spotting "Diamonds in the Ruff" and creating whimsical athletic delights through her choreography. Her favorite moments are seeing technique and seamless movement fuse as one.
